GRADUATES OF THE BACHELOR'S DEGREE PROGRAMME IN THE FIELD OF STUDY OF LAW:

The bachelor's degree programme fully reflects the areas and scope of knowledge, skills and competences that define a graduate of a first-cycle higher education programme, in accordance with Act No. 300/2025 Coll. on Higher Education Institutions and on Amendments to Certain Acts (the Higher Education Act) and Decree No. 205/2026 of the Ministry of Education, Research, Development and Youth of the Slovak Republic implementing certain provisions of the Higher Education Act.

The bachelor's degree programme in the field of study of Law provides a foundation for the subsequent master's degree programme. This also reflects the statutory requirements governing access to legal professions.

Graduates of the bachelor's programme acquire knowledge of the theory of law and the theory of the state, the development and specific features of legal thought, the basic methodology for working with legal and law-related texts, and the foundations of the processes involved in creating, implementing and applying law. They also acquire knowledge of various branches of public and private law (administrative law, criminal law, public international law, constitutional law, civil law, family law, commercial law, labour law, etc.), with a principal focus on substantive law (except for administrative procedural law, which is already studied at bachelor's level). Study of substantive law provides the foundation for the subsequent master's programme, which focuses primarily on procedural law.

Graduates understand the division of the legal system into branches based on the subject matter and methods of regulation, as well as the interrelationships between the different branches of law and the structural principles of the legal system. They learn to work with legal and law-related texts and to produce their own legal texts. They understand legal terminology and the specialised language and forms of expression used in law, both receptively and as active users. They develop the ability to navigate the legal system, professional literature and judicial practice, and to analyse and synthesise the individual components of the legal system.

Graduates acquire the skills needed to identify the relevant legal provision and resolve a specific legal problem on that basis using the subsumption syllogism. They can interpret legal texts, use methods of legal interpretation, draw a legally relevant conclusion to resolve a specific case, and argue logically and in an appropriate, generally acceptable manner both for and against possible solutions. They can identify factual and legal issues, translate factual issues into legal classifications—that is, express them using legal concepts and terms—subsume them under the relevant legal rule, institution and normative framework, classify them under the appropriate legal categories, distinguish them from related categories and, finally, apply the appropriate legal solution to the facts using legal methods.

Graduates can work independently and in teams, think critically and assess factual and legal situations or problems, taking other normative systems (such as morality) into account where relevant. The skills and competences acquired during their studies enable them to combine knowledge from different branches of law, assess factual (social) and legal problems, and reach reasoned legal conclusions. These skills and competences can also be transferred to the resolution of new legal problems.

Graduates can present a legal problem publicly, orally and in writing, at an appropriate substantive and formal level, while respecting the standards of scholarly and professional work and the principles of academic integrity. Knowledge outcomes are ensured and supported by completion of compulsory and compulsory-elective courses. Skills and competences are specifically developed through courses focused on research methodology, ethical dilemmas, the preparation and writing of a final thesis, and practical clinical courses. The bachelor's programme is intended for students who have completed full secondary education or full secondary vocational education.
